Dear Friends,

Last Friday evening, the Jewish community around the world began commemorating the High Holy Days, with the commemoration of Rosh Hashanah, the Jewish New Year. This is the beginning of the “Days of Awe,” which mark the annual ten-day period of reflection and repentance, culminating in Yom Kippur. Here at the University of Scranton, we have been blessed for many years by the Jewish community, and we continue to be grateful for students, faculty, and staff who especially commemorate these days.

I write today, in the name of the division of Mission and Ministry, to wish the entire Jewish community at the University, your families, friends, and congregations, Shanah tovah u’metukah, a good and sweet year, filled with many graces and blessings from our Creator.

Sincerely,

Dan Cosacchi
